KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

If you're looking for a way to support a good cause, consider smashing a pie tin of whipped cream in your face. Called the Pie Face Challenge, the trend is raising awareness and donations for gastroparesis, a rare stomach condition. Massachusetts native Andrew Belliveau started the movement. NEW EVACUATIONS AS CALIF. WILDFIRES RAGE ON

1 The largest California wildfire advanced on coastal towns near Santa Barbara on Sunday, stoked by the gusty winds and dry conditions that have fueled destructive blazes across the state's southern region. Authorities ordered residents in parts of Carpinteria and Montecito to evacuate early on Sunday as the Thomas Fire edged closer to the city of Santa Barbara, about 100 miles west of Los Angeles. The blaze has already blackened 155,000 acres and consumed hundreds of structures. Some half-dozen fires have raged across California since early last week. At least one home in Carpinteria burned down on Sunday, the Santa Barbara County Fire Department said. The fire was only 15 percent contained as of Sunday morning, according to the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

PALESTINIAN STABS ISRAELI IN JERUSALEM

2 A Palestinian stabbed an Israeli security guard at Jerusalem's main bus station on Sunday, police said, and violence flared near the U.S. Embassy in Beirut over President Donald Trump's recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital. Four days of street protests in the Palestinian territories over Trump's announcement on Wednesday have largely died down, but his overturning of long-standing U.S. policy on Jerusalem -- a city holy to Jews, Muslims and Christians -- drew more Arab warnings of potential damage to prospects for Middle East peace. "Our hope is that everything is calming down and that we are returning to a path of normal life without riots and without violence," Israeli Defence Minister Avigdor Lieberman said on Army Radio.

SCULPTOR CHOSEN FOR NEW DIANA STATUE

4 A sculptor who produced the image of Queen Elizabeth used on Britain's coins has been chosen to create a new statue of Princess Diana, the office of Princes William and Harry said on Sunday, to commemorate 20 years since her death. Ian Rank-Broadley, whose effigy of the Queen has appeared on all UK and Commonwealth coinage since 1998, will design the statue, which now will not be unveiled until next year. "Ian is an extremely gifted sculptor and we know that he will create a fitting and lasting tribute to our mother," Prince William and his younger brother Harry said in a statement. In January, the brothers commissioned a statue in honor of their mother, who died in a Paris car crash 20 years ago to be erected outside their official London home Kensington Palace.

IRAQ HOLDS PARADE AFTER DEFEATING ISIS

5 An Iraqi military parade in Baghdad's heavily fortified Green Zone celebrated final victory over Islamic State on Sunday, with Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi looking on as troops marched in formation, their bodies spelling "victory day" in Arabic. Abadi, who is also commander-in-chief of the armed forces, listened solemnly to Quranic verses from a chapter titled al-Nasr, meaning victory. Iraqi forces recaptured the last areas still under Islamic State control along the border with Syria on Saturday and secured the western desert, marking the end of the war against the militants three years after they had captured about a third of Iraq's territory. The forces fighting Islamic State in Iraq and Syria now expect a new phase of guerrilla warfare.

Pie Face Challenge started by Mass. native raises awareness for gastroparesis

Andrew Belliveau was diagnosed at 10 years old, afflicted with constant nausea. He now hopes to bring awareness to the condition. ANDREW BELLIVEAU

Inspired by the Ice Bucket Challenge, Andrew Belliveau started the Gastroparesis Pie Face Challenge for his rare condition.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

As you're home for the holidays this year, considering pieing your family and friends in the face. After all, it's for a good cause.

The idea comes from Andrew Belliveau, a 20-year-old Lynn native who is currently a junior at Elms College in Chicopee.

Belliveau created the Gastroparesis Pie Face Challenge as a way to raise awareness and research donations for his condition.

"Gastroparesis is essentially a paralyzed stomach, meaning that you can't digest food or absorb any nutrients," he said. "I like to say it's much more than that, though, because it's [also about] not socializing, being isolated from others, you're always starving and having to force yourself to eat knowing that it's going to come up eventually."

Belliveau was diagnosed at 10 years old, afflicted with constant nausea and sometimes vomiting up to 15 times a day. He would often have to leave school early, he said, but with the help of his family, he persevered through the worst.

There's no cure for gastroparesis, or a lot of attention around it.

"It's such an invisible condition, because you kind of present normally on the outside, but inside it's a totally different ballgame," he said.

To help fuel that awareness and research money in hopes of a cure, Belliveau started the Gastroparesis Pie Face Challenge, inspired by the ALS Ice Bucket Challenge and the viral Hasbro game "Pie Face."

Like ALS, gastroparesis is a rare condition, but it's still more common than the nervous system disease. Raising awareness, Belliveau said, may help people realize that they suffer from gastroparesis, which affects fewer than 200,000 people in the United States each year

To join the challenge, all you have to do is record yourself smashing a pie tin full of whipped cream into your face (or a loved one's), challenge others, upload it to social media and make a donation to G-PACT, a nonprofit that stands for Gastroparesis Patient Association for Cures and Treatments.

Belliveau's own symptoms have been under control since he received a gastric stimulator in 2012, which he described as "a pacemaker for your stomach." Still, he's urging people to get pied for the cause — so far, he's raised $5,000 for G-PACT.

Boston Red Sox pitcher David Price completed the challenge in 2016, spurring other players to join in. That was a notable moment for Belliveau, but it was just as rewarding seeing his family get pied.

"At first, it took a lot of convincing," he said, but eventually, they all took part. "My parents and my sister, they've supported me throughout being sick and continue to push me to live a normal life. This is my way of thanking them for all the hard work that they did, and trying to inspire others to do the same."

What to know about the new BPS start times

Boston Public Schools is changing school day start-times in an effort to help teens academically.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

More than 100 schools across the Boston Public Schools district are changing up their start times next year.

After the Boston School Committee unanimously voted to change school start times last week, officials have released the new start and end times for the 105 out of the district's total 125 schools that will be affected.

The changes will be enacted for the 2018-19 school year, meaning more middle and high school students will begin classes at or after 8 a.m.

"School bell times have tangible impacts on the lives of families, ranging from jobs to a student's academic performance," said BPS Superintendent Tommy Chang in a statement. "As a district, we must make sure that our students and families are set up for success, and they deserve nothing less. I am confident that next year's school bell schedule will be an improvement for the majority of families, and is reflective of the feedback we have received from thousands of students, parents and staff."

The move is supported, BPS officials say, by research that shows teenagers do better academically when their school days start later. Dr. Judith Owens, director of sleep medicine at Boston Children's Hospital, commended the change as a step toward promoting "health, safety, well-being and learning in adolescents."

"Later school start times promote healthy sleep, which not only helps students perform better academically, but decreases the risk of car crashes, depression and alcohol and substance abuse," she said in a statement. "We all win."

With this change, 97 percent of secondary students in the BPS system will be starting their school days after 8 a.m., compared to 27 percent who did previously.

BPS also changed elementary school start times so that those students can be dismissed before 4 p.m. Previously, BPS schools either started at 7:30, 8:30 or 9:30. Now, school days will start every 15 minutes between 7:15 and 9:30 a.m.

To find out the new start time for your or your child's school, head to bostonpublicschools.org.

Ready for some $h#!-scary comedy that's not CNN? Watch 'Future Man'

Seth Rogen plays on all of our fears as he avenges the universe.

"Future Man" stars Eliza Coupe (from the future) and Josh Hutcherson (the janitor-turned-hero). HULU

JOSÉ BARRETO
MWN
letters@metro.us

Seth Rogen is the comedy genius behind everything from Pumbaa's voice (in the upcoming live-action "Lion King") to each iteration of "Kung Fu Panda." Not to mention "The Interview," which drew the U.S. as close to war with North Korea as possible — pre-Trump, that is.

His latest (as producer) is "Future Man," a new Hulu series about a janitor who lives with his parents who is destined to save the world because of his epic score on a computer game. It's the apocalypse, but funny.

What is it about the world ending that is so appealing?
I think everyone likes to hallucinate about what might happen at that moment. As a child, I would think about what it would be like to have the ability to end the world. As an adult, I've been fascinated by the subject and it's great to do comedy about something that terrifies everyone.

Was "Future Man" always meant to be a series?
It was conceived first as a movie. But almost at the end we realized that it worked more as a pilot of something that we were interested in seeing later.

How did you decide on Josh Hutcherson as the star?
A couple of years ago we made a movie called "The Disaster Artist" — Josh had a very small role there, but was really funny. I was impressed by his ability to give so much laughter in such a short time.

Do you worry about falling into tropes when you delve back into the world of the '80s and '90s?
I always use things that I've grown up with. Pop culture from the '80s and '90s will always be in my projects. Yes, I must say that there are films that I always return to and, in fact, are the ones that prompted me to do this. Some of them are Pulp Fiction or Reservoir Dogs, both by Quentin Tarantino. References aren't things we think about a lot because they come out naturally — they're elements that we grew up with.

What are your dream roles?
I want to be in "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit." I'd like to join the police unit because I think I have everything it takes to be good. In every episode I see, I feel I can help. [Laughs]

Cold as ice, and crazy entertaining

The stars of "I, Tonya" dish on breaking kneecaps.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroBOS
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

One of the year's most anticipated movies, for reasons we're slightly ashamed to admit, is "I, Tonya." Because who doesn't love an early '90s period movie with a Hallmark Channel storyline, an A-list cast and a whole lot of bedazzled spandex?

The tale of Tonya Harding and the tragically flawed takedown of her "friend"/opponent Nancy Kerrigan is told in 260 scenes over 110 pages of script … and we only wish there was more.

From an upbringing that would be politely described as "humble" to figure skating elite, only to be banned from the sport (despite her long list of firsts — first woman to execute a triple axle in a short program, first woman to execute two triple axles in a competition, and more) for collusion in a hit job on another competitor, Tonya Harding's story is still compelling. You don't have to follow figure skating to know her name, as well as Nancy Kerrigan's and Kristi Yamaguchi's, and now we get the story delivered with all the hair spray and cigarette smoke it deserves — but with the added benefit of a tenacious Margot Robbie (playing Harding) and the always-perfect Allison Janney (playing her mother).

Metro recently had the chance to chat with them both about the film.

So, what's it like to play a real-life person who's become a meme?

Allison Janney: I was so thrilled at the possibility to play a character that was so offensive. Especially because it was like, "Why a bird and a fur coat? Where does that come from?" But when I watched the documentary there was LaVona looking exactly like that.

This isn't your typical holiday feel-good movie. So … what were you thinking?

Margot Robbie: There were scenes where I would be laughing out loud, and then in the same scene suddenly feel very guilty for laughing. It made me think, "Wow, am I a s—y person for laughing at that?" It was constantly sucking me in and then pushing it in my face. I found that exciting, thrilling and new.

This doesn't look like a typical biopic. It looks more like a movie not at all based on a true story.
Margot Robbie: This was very unconventional. There's the mockumentary-style interviews that kind of anchor the whole story. It's filled with unreliable narrators butting in on each other's stories and contradicting each other, and all of those aspects just make it so exciting and appealing.
Allison Janney: This is not just from one person's point of view. This is from many different players' point of views. Which ends up making it a comedy. None of us believe we're in a comedy. But the juxtaposition of our stories, and my version against hers, that's where the comedy comes.

Isn't this just the backstory of (deep breath) the bad girl of figure skating?
Allison Janney: Most people think Tonya took a baseball bat to Nancy Kerrigan's shins. She was not involved. But to what degree she was involved is up to what you believe."

"I, Tonya" is out in limited release now, with a nationwide rollout in the next few weeks.

Lyft has revealed the winners of its 2017 Lyftie Awards.

Now in its third year, the annual awards celebrate the most visited restaurants, bars and other locations by users of the ride-sharing company in various metropolitan areas, including Boston. According to Lyft, the number of riders in the Hub who use the app to go grab a bite or visit an event more than doubled since 2016.

The winner of this year's Lyftie for the most visited restaurant in Boston goes to the fan-favorite seafood joint Legal Harborside. It doesn't come as a total surprise that a restaurant in the Seaport would claim a win, as Lyft found that the city's waterfront district has increased in popularity by 150 percent for 2017.

Another Seaport staple, the Harpoon Brewery and Beer Hall, also took a victory in the most visited bar category, which probably explains why there are always so many people lined up for beer tours—and to munch on those tasty pretzels.

As for the other winners from the Hub, the Boston Convention Center was named the most visited event venue in the city while Harvard University was chosen as Boston's most visited university. The Prudential Center also took home the only in Boston award for being a top destination that's unique to the city.

The Boston destination with the biggest increase in Lyft traffic since 2016 goes to Coppersmith in South Boston, which was named the city's trending destination with this year's Lyftie Awards.

In addition to honoring local hotspots, Lyft revealed its list of the most visited spots around the country for 2017. Greek eatery Souvla in San Francisco was named the most visited restaurant this year, while Good Times at Davey Wayne's in Los Angeles took home the award for the most visited bar.

Check out the full list of winners at take.lyft.com/thelyftieawards.

Using humanity as a marketing tool

The firm #paid pairs companies with web influencers to help appeal to followers. ISTOCK

How social-media influencers have changed the face of advertising.

PAT KING
@MetroBOS
patrick.king@metro.us

In our fast-paced ADD-driven society, one thing has become abundantly clear: Traditional advertising is not as effective as it used to be.

People do not trust those old "Mad Men" style ad placements designed by big agencies in order to cram products down our throats. The buyer-seller relationship used to be involuntary, to some degree. Did anyone really enjoy Sea Monkeys, Chia Pets or the musical stylings of the Baha Men? The short answer is: No. Today, people can see these bulls—t boardroom tactics for what they really are and choose to engage more actively with social-media influencers to get recommendations on everyday products.

Influencers are everyday people turned huge sensations online. By using platforms like Instagram, Facebook, and Snapchat, these e-famous folks are paid to post about their favorite products to their throngs of followers. This trend has revolutionized the marketing industry and you can attribute it to one central belief: Everyday people respond to humanity. More people will buy something a "friend" recommends than an actual Kardashian.

CSO Adam Rivietz recognized this and co-founded his firm, #Paid, to help companies pair up with popular web influencers to help sell products to followers. These companies aren't rinky-dink mom and pops, either; #Paid has worked with some of the biggest brands out there, like Coca-Cola, Microsoft, and Airbnb. So why do these huge international names look for regular people to sell their products instead of, say, celebrities?

"[Celebrities] are trying to parlay their real-world fame online, whereas an influencer's entire fame was built online," explains Rivietz, "across the board if you compare a traditional celebrity with an influencer, of the same follower count, the engagement rates are always higher from an influencer."

One of #Paid's biggest success stories is Christian Collins, aka @WeeklyChris. Once a shy teen from the west coast of Canada, Collins started posting videos on YouTube and gained a huge following. He now has 3.6 million followers on Instagram, 1.69 million followers on Twitter and multiple endorsements from companies that pay him to post his recommendations to his followers that value his opinion.

"In terms of branding, it works very well when there's a natural, organic relationship with the brand," Collins says, "because there's such an intimate relationship with my followers, and it's something I genuinely enjoy, it would be like your best friend recommending something."

Rivietz believes if a brand has to choose between a self-made social-media-savvy influencer, like Collins, or a busy celebrity who could change their brand allegiance overnight, the choice is a no-brainer. "Influencers are content creators first. That's why they've risen to the top of social media."

3 Things to watch for as Pats invade Miami to face Fins

This is 40

Tom Brady seems to be getting hit harder than ever at age 40 and every time No. 12 goes down for two to three seconds, Boston holds its collective breath. Brady was hit seven times against the Dolphins two weeks ago, four of those seven coming from old nemesis Cameron Wake. With a good amount of pressure, Brady also threw his third interception of the season to Bobby McCain when he wasn't able to step into his throw.

Dolphins defensive tackle Ndamukong Suh, who also got to Brady two weeks ago, was happy to see Brady screaming at offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels last week against the Bills and hopes Brady's frustrations continue Monday (8:30 p.m., ESPN) in Miami.

"I'd love to make him mad," Suh told the Palm Beach Post. "My job is to piss him off and have him yelling at his offensive linemen for not blocking me, his coach and everybody on the sideline. That's my job."

Smokin' Jay

The Patriots feasted on Miami quarterback Matt Moore 15 days ago, forcing Moore to throw two interceptions. Moore finished the game — a 35-17 loss to the Pats — having completed 23-of-34 passes for 215 yards. He finished with an ugly 70.1 passer rating.

As bad as Moore was in that one, expect Jay Cutler to be worse in Miami Gardens on Monday night. The Pats historically own Cutler as he is 0-3 against New England. Cutler has lost those games by a combined 91 points and he's averaged an ugly 182.3 passing yards in those L's while throwing five interceptions.

A capable 'D'

The best way to raise the confidence of a defense in today's NFL is to play the Denver Broncos and that's exactly what the Dolphins did last weekend when they dominated Denver, 35-9. Miami forced Trevor Siemian into three interceptions and the defense recorded two safeties in one game for the first time in franchise history.

Prior to the Denver game, though, the Dolphins were giving up 36.6 points per game in their previous three weeks (losses to the Patriots, Buccaneers and Panthers). The Dolphins do have some impressive wins on their resume thanks to strong defensive efforts this season as they held the Chargers to 19 points way back on Sept. 17 and held Atlanta to 20 points on Oct. 15. MATT BURKE

Rex Burkhead has emerged as a top option on offense for the Patriots.

New star every game

The Pats continue to get monster performances from unheralded players.

JAMES TOSCANO
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

Last weekend it was the Bills up in Buffalo. Tonight it should be the Dolphins down in Miami.

The Pats simply own the AFC East.

That's not a story – really, it can't be at this point because it happens so often. What is interesting, though, is how the Patriots are winning these games, and some of the unheralded players are making major contributions along the way.

Look no further than the Bills game, when the Patriots defense held the Bills to a total of three points. It was the eighth straight game in which the opponent had scored under 20 points, the longest consecutive number of games for a Patriots defense under Bill Belichick. Patriots defensive coordinator Matt Patricia deserves some serious praise for turning things around, as New England began the year allowing a historically bad six straight 300-yard passing games by opposing quarterbacks. That seems like forever ago now, as the Patriots have allowed an average of 11.9 points per game over the last eight games. The Bills' leading receiver against the Pats was Zay Jones, who had 22 yards. And while major contributors on defense have been in and out of the lineup this season, the Patriots have found players to step in and step up in a pinch.

Take defensive end Eric Lee for example. Lee, on the Bills practice squad a few weeks ago, made his first career start in Buffalo. Lee picked off Tyrod Taylor on the 1-yard line on the first drive of the game, sacked him later in the quarter, was credited with a half sack on backup Nathan Peterman in the fourth quarter, had three QB hits, and two passes defended.

Lee got the start in place of the injured Trey Flowers – and he certainly did his best impression of him too.

"Well, he's done the things that we've asked him to do and he's done them at a pretty good level," Bill Belichick said. "I mean, he's only been here a couple weeks... But, overall, he's done a solid job for us in the things that he's been asked to do."

It's not just on the defensive side where unlikely names are rising to the top. How about running back Rex Burkhead?

The Patriots made a relatively big splash by snatching former Bills back Mike Gillislee from them over the offseason. The Burkhead signing went largely unnoticed.

Againts Buffalo, however, Gillislee was the healthy scratch and Burkhead was the team's goal line back, finishing with 78 rushing yards and two touchdowns to go with three receptions and 25 receiving yards. He has six total touchdowns on the year for the Patriots, though he had just four in his first three NFL seasons with the Bengals.

With the Pats missing a big target in Rob Gronkowski (one-game suspension) Monday night, Burkhead will continue to be called upon to move the chains and put up points.

Aries Set up meetings that will help you address important matters before the year comes to a close. Personal growth and will encourage you to make wise choices.

Taurus Dig deep and find out all you can. Knowledge is power, and knowing how to apply it when faced with someone trying to outdo you will help you gain ground.

Gemini Participate in festivities that will bring you in touch with old friends or colleagues. Express your feelings and offer kind gestures, but don't get talked into something you probably shouldn't do.

Cancer Address personal issues before someone complains or makes demands. Have a plan ready to offset an unsavory choice someone wants you to make.

Leo Make plans to get together with old friends or to go shopping for items you want to purchase before the year ends. Share your feelings with someone you love.

Virgo Be careful how you handle matters pertaining to your home and family. Not everyone will be happy with the limitations you set or criticisms you make.

Libra Get into the spirit of the season. Ask questions and find out how old friends and family are doing. Showing consideration and toward others will make you feel good.

Scorpio Do whatever you can to help those less fortunate. Your effort will be appreciated, and you will discover something or someone that gives you incentive to follow your dream.

Sagittarius Take the time to schmooze with your peers. Being a good listener will help you form advantageous relationships. Update your image and make love a priority.

Capricorn Look at the big picture as well as your expectations. Excessive behavior will lead to personal and emotional loss. Only take on what you can handle.

Aquarius Listen to your heart, not to what others tell you. Someone is likely to offer information that won't apply to your situation or that could end up costing you time.

Pisces Listen to what others have to say. The more information you gather, the easier it will be for you to communicate your thoughts and contributions. EUGENIA LAST
